Zucchini and sea greens soup

ASSISTS WEIGHT CONTROL ASSISTS WEIGHT CONTROL

This soup is healthy yet nourishing, and beneficial to the body. Zucchini are cooling by nature, as they help to build body fluids and relieve dryness, while seaweed is an excellent source of minerals. Seaweed is also known for its ability to help remove toxic waste from the body, improve kidney function, alkaline the blood, assist in weight control, and lower cholesterol.

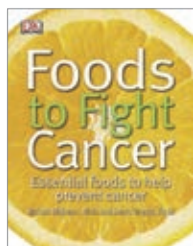

MAKES 4 SERVINGS:

- 1 handful of dried wakame seaweed, or any other colorful soft leaf seaweed, such as dulse
- 4 shallots, chopped
- 1 medium-sized fennel bulb, chopped
- 5 medium-sized zucchini, sliced
- 1 cup of fresh parsley, finely chopped
- salt and freshly ground black pepper, to taste
- a drizzle of pumpkin seed oil

- 1 Soak the seaweed in at least 1 pint (500ml) of clean water.
- 2 Place a tablespoon of water in a saucpan and heat. Add the chopped shallots and cook over a low heat with the lid on, stirring occasionally.
- 3 When soft, add the fennel and zucchini. Continue to cook the vegetables with the lid on until they are tender.
- 4 Drain the seaweed. Place the cooked vegetables in a blender or food processor, add the chopped parsley and 100 ea-1 pint (500-600ml) of water and blend until smooth. Add salt and black pepper to taste.
- 5 Divide the rehydrated seaweed leaves into 4 piles, pour the soup into individual bowls, and scatter the seaweed over the top of each serving. Sprinkle over the fresh parsley and a little drizzle of the pumpkin seed oil in each to serve.

52 EXPLAINING | SHOOTING MODES

WHAT IS APERTURE PRIORITY MODE?

When you switch your camera to Aperture Priority you're telling it that you want to decide on the aperture that's used to take your photographs; the camera will then set the shutter speed automatically, so you get the correct exposure overall. More than this, when you choose the aperture, you're deciding what depth of field you want in your shot, which is one of the most important creative decisions you can make. Em, nestatus hacchum, neritorea remquid lenaque.

IN CAMERA

• Aperture Priority is often indicated on the mode dial by the letter A, although some manufacturers use Av.

What effects can I achieve?

The main reason why you want to control the aperture is because it allows you to determine depth of field. This is the amount of the scene in front of and behind the actual focus point that appears sharp in your final image. Using a small aperture increases the depth of field, so more of your scene appears sharp, but it often results in longer shutter speeds (or higher ISO settings), which may mean that you'll need to use a tripod. Wider aperture settings reduce the depth of field and help ensure fast shutter speeds, but you need to bear in mind that choosing where to focus becomes even more important than usual.

DEPTH OF FIELD PREVIEW

When you look through your camera's viewfinder, the lens will be set at its widest aperture so you see a bright image. However, the view shows you the depth of field you will get for some (but not all) camera features a depth of field preview button. This is usually located beside the lens mount.

	IRIS	F/STOP	FOREGROUND FOCUS	APPROXIMATE DEPTH OF FIELD	BACKGROUND FOCUS
WIDE APERTURE	Setting a wide aperture opens up the iris to allow more light through the lens. However, it also reduces the depth of field so that only the point you focus on appears sharp; almost everything behind and in front of this point will appear blurred. This is great when you want to conceal a distracting background.	IRIS	f/2.8
MEDIUM APERTURE	A medium aperture setting offers the best compromise between depth of field and the amount of light passing through the lens. Medium aperture settings are also typically those at which the lens delivers its best performance in terms of image sharpness.	IRIS	f/5.6
SMALL APERTURE	Using a small aperture (sometimes referred to as 'stopping down') restricts the amount of light passing through the lens. It also increases the depth of field, so that much of the scene appears in focus, using a small aperture setting it is possible to get everything in your picture looking sharp.	IRIS	f/11

60 10 steps to preparing your plot

step 6 Watering methods

Fruit and vegetable plants depend on regular watering in order to grow. Lack of water is the most common reason for plants dying. During dry periods in the summer it may be necessary to visit the allotment daily to check on young seedlings and water them. Install water-saving devices such as water butts to maximize water conservation.

Water butts Collect rainwater by attaching gutters to the shed or greenhouse roof, and attach downpipes that feed into barrels or water butts.

Water tank and cistern Many allotments also have a water tank with a cistern. Every time water is scraped out, it automatically refills itself.

Strandpipes Some sites provide a standpipe to which hoses and irrigation systems can be connected, making watering easier.

Getting it right

Giving your plants the right amount of water is critical. They will die if they don't receive enough, yet they can also suffer if they are overwatered. If fruit is overwatered it can split, particularly when close to harvest time. Vegetables often rot in damp conditions, and seedlings can suffer from fungal diseases. The simplest way to see if your plants need watering is to stick your finger in the soil: if it feels dry, then it needs water. Give plants a thorough soak every few days to ensure that water gets right down to the deep roots.

Step 6: Watering methods 67

Better watering

On hot days, water in the morning or the evening when it is cooler. This gives the moisture an opportunity to soak slowly into the soil. Watering at midday in full sun can cause the leaves to scorch, and water quickly evaporates, rather than soaking in. Check the individual requirements of your crops as some don't like alkaline water. This is particularly the case with blueberries and cranberries, which should only be watered with rainwater. Soil type, especially how well it drains, also affects how often plants will need to be watered.

Watering with a rose Traditional canes used for controlling the extent of water given to individual plants, attaching a rose to the end of the spray gives a gentle flow ideal when watering young plants.

Puddle watering Creating a shallow or deep central puddle acts as a reservoir, allowing water to pool around the base, and slowly soak down to the roots. However, make sure that the roots are still covered by soil, rather than they wither and rot from exposure, and can be covered by peat.

Using a chopstick This is the simplest method of watering large areas, but it can be wasteful. Insert the butt of the butt of each plant or the water reaches the roots and doesn't splash northwards off the leaves.

Using a homemade funnel Cut the bases off plastic bottles and have the mouth end in the soil, next to plants. The narrow channel that will funnel the water directly to the roots.

Additional help

There are various irrigation methods and devices available to make watering easier. They help if you can't water the plot every day.

Bottle reservoirs Take holes in the caps of water-filled bottles and bury them in the soil.

Pouch reservoirs This method involves a large or small filled pouch suspended over crops that slowly water them via a thin tube.

WATER WISELY

- Consider others when using communal taps.
- Check whether the soil is dry to avoid water wastage.
- Water in the morning or evening.
- Use small water butts to minimize using excess water.
- Don't waste water - only water around the root system of your plants.

Vino Robles
San Luis Obispo County, Central Coast
Wine White, Riesling, Pinot Noir (white)

Vino Robles arrived in Paso Robles in the late 1970s and has been making consistent wines ever since. A family-owned operation, it is owned by Hans and, as manager, with fellow twins, Marlene and, making the wines. Half-acre vineyard (100%) of vines, but most of the fruit is sold to other producers. The Winery is a refreshing blend of four grapes—usually dominated by Riesling or Pinot Noir—with accents of Grenache and Cabernet of white, pink, and black.

Vino Noceto
Amador County, Inland California
Wine Merlot, Cabernet Sauvignon, Pinot Noir (white)

Spring arrives in Northern California when the first bottle of Vino Noceto California Merlot is opened, beginning the day with its sunny heat and smooth texture. It is a long wine of Merlot, Cabernet Sauvignon, and Pinot Noir, with a touch of Syrah, decidedly sweet, full-bodied, and low in alcohol. It is the work of Jim and Judy Geller, who moved to the Paso Robles in the 1970s in search of new vineyard locations. The couple are mostly admired—local area—for the charming way they have gone about their business, which has focused on making original wines with an intimate reputation, using the Italian grape varieties that they believe suit the warm climate in Amador County. Having made a modest 110 cases in their first vintage in 1980, they now produce around 9,000 cases a year. As well as the Merlot, they are known for their Pinot Noir, which they make in a number of different styles, including grape. Winemaking is now in the hands of Judy Geller, who used to work for the Eisele/Robles Winery, with Nancy Geller employed as a consultant.

Wente Vineyards
San Francisco Bay, Central Coast
Wine Chardonnay, Cabernet Sauvignon, Merlot (white)

Karl Wente, the founder of Wente Vineyards, was one of the pioneers of the Livermore Valley. He started the family business way back in 1883, and today this flagship of the region is still owned and run by the fourth and fifth generations of the Wente family, making it the oldest continuously operating family-run winery in the U.S. Wente is well known throughout the world, thanks to an enlightened and visionary export policy that puts many California wineries to shame. The business has also been partly responsible for rescuing Livermore's vineyards from housing developers. The vineyard is based, covering a vast array of vines, both still and sparkling, but it is of a consistently good quality, too. Harvested after another Livermore winemaking pioneer, the Charles Wente Cabernet Sauvignon is a medium-weight red that offers ripe black cherry and roasted coffee flavors with an attractive hint of cedar.

Volker Eisele Family Estate
Chico Valley
Wine Gewürztraminer, Chardonnay (white)

Founded more than 50 years ago by Volker and Loretta Eisele, Volker Eisele is one of the best producers in the Chico Valley, a rugged, cool-climate corner of the Yuba Valley. Organic production is very much at the heart of operations at the 400-acre (500+) family estate, and it has proved—almost by itself—that the Chico Valley, which is located in the east of the other Yuba Valley (Yuba), is capable of producing fine wine. Today the wines are made by Volker and Loretta's son, Alexander Eisele, who augments with his careful, skilled, and hardworking approach to a range of complex, intense wines. All that skill is immediately apparent in the Volker Eisele Family Estate Gewürztraminer. A weighty, full-bodied, aromatic blend, it features cherry fig and subtle flavors contributed by Sauvignon Blanc coupled with variety grape, red, grape, and vanilla on the surprisingly spicy finish.

400 Lower Chico Valley Rd., Chico, CA 95926
www.voleiselefamilestate.com

Whitehall Lane Winery
Napa Valley
Wine Merlot, Napa Valley (white), Sauvignon Blanc, Napa Valley (white)

Based in Redwood, the Whitehall Lane Winery is a small, no-frills, no-nonsense producer with a reputation for producing consistently good quality and well-priced wines. The business has been around since 1980 by the Leventis family, and the family's home style is very much of the classic old school, combining moderate weight and alcohol for a touch of elegance. This is currently one of the finest Napa Valley Merlots, where a touch of aromatic Syrah perfumes the dark cherry notes of velvety Merlot with a medium and vanilla touch, darker notes, raspberry, and cherry. The lighter-bodied Napa Valley Sauvignon Blanc is equally well made, and has a profile that takes to intense tropical fruit and green citrus notes with ripe citrus notes on the palate. Refreshing acidity keeps the wine equally clean right through to the finish.

ZINFANDEL

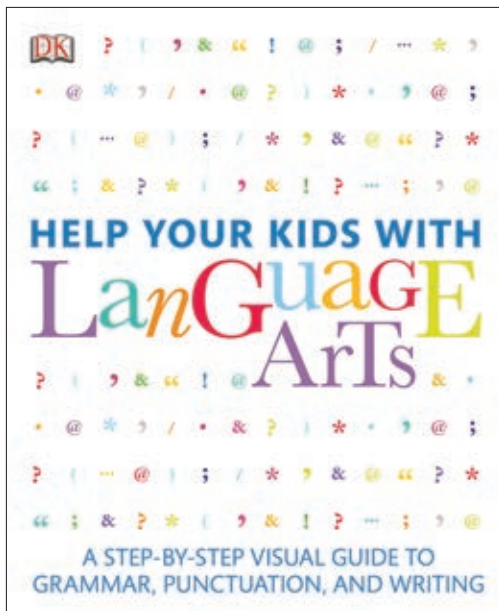

Is it Zinfandel, Pinot Noir, or the tongue twister Ceylan Katselanski? That depends on where the affordable, fresh, ripe, and fruity red is made. In California, Zinfandel has been a mainstay of wine-grape vineyards for more than 150 years.

The most popular style of wine made from the variety in California is a light, slightly sweet and called white Zinfandel. But a California red Zinfandel is usually full-bodied, with more than 15% alcohol in some cases, deep in color and dripping with ripe berry and blackberry flavors.

Pinot Noir is this grape's name in Italy, where winemakers have used it for centuries. Specialists in ampelography, the study of plant collection, puzzled over Zinfandel's origin for decades. California claimed it as practically indigenous. Italian said Zinfandel was similar to Pinot Noir but the variety belonged to them. In the 1990s, genetic research of the University of California at Davis confirmed that Zinfandel and Pinot Noir are basically identical genetically, and that both are descendants of the ancient Croatian grape variety, Ceylan Katselanski, which still grows along the Dalmatian Coast.

White Zinfandel is an easy-to-drink, low-alcohol, low-acid refreshment. Red Zinfandel is big in alcohol, but not as intense in texture and has a sweet-sour ripeness that goes well with cheese, pasta, slow-cooked pork, grilled chicken, or can even be enjoyed after the meal, like a port.

Zinfandel grapes become rarer quickly if harvested too late.

Voices and moods

SENTENCES IN ENGLISH CAN BE EXPRESSED IN DIFFERENT VOICES AND DIFFERENT MOODS.

There are two voices in English—active and passive. These modify the strength of a sentence by using different subjects. Mood corresponds to the degree of reality a speaker assigns to what he or she is saying.

The active voice
Verbs can be used in two different ways. These are known as "voices," because they affect how a sentence sounds. The active voice is usually used, because it is clearer and more concise than the passive voice. It is also more direct, as the subject is performing the action. The object is the person or thing receiving the action.

The passive voice
The passive voice is less abrupt than the active voice, and is often used in situations where the active voice might be perceived as aggressive—for example, on public notices. In a passive sentence, the word order is reversed so that the subject is receiving the action, and the object is performing it. The performer of the action (the subject of an active sentence) is now the object of a passive sentence.

REAL WORLD
Passively put
The passive voice is often used on official signs, because it is perceived as less confrontational than that in their words. In these situations, it is also often necessary to state who is performing the action.

Moods
There are three main moods in English. These show the writer's attitude to what he or she is saying, and offer different degrees of certainty.

Stating facts
Most verbs are used in the indicative mood, which indicates an actual condition, as opposed to an imagined, expected or believed condition.

Giving orders
The imperative mood is used to give commands or to make requests. Exclamations are often in the imperative mood.

Wishful thinking
The subjunctive mood is rarely used in English, and can only be identified in the third person form or with the verb "be." It tends to follow verbs like "request," "wish," "suggest," "desire" or "require" or expressions such as "it is essential that," because the use of a subjunctive verb implies that whatever is requested or wished for might not actually happen. In the subjunctive, the final "s" is removed from the third person form of most verbs, the main verb.

Changing moods
Most sentences use the indicative mood, but sometimes the imperative is required to give a command. The subjunctive is occasionally used when something is unlikely to happen.

Conditional sentences
Conditional sentences can also use the subjunctive. These usually start with "if" or "unless," indicating that the situation being described is wished for or unlikely to occur. If a sentence uses the past tense form of the subjunctive, the verb is expressing a wish or hope that can never be fulfilled.

Indicative	Imperative	Subjunctive
The boy is running away.	Run away!	It is vital that the boy run away.
He looks a cheek.	Please don't move.	I wished that he were braver.
The snake looks vicious.	Do not approach the snake.	I suggested that he avoid the snake.
He should go home.	Go home!	I insisted that he go home.

THE ENLIGHTENMENT OF THE BUDDHA

IN CONTEXT

KEY FIGURE
Siddhartha Gautama

WHEN AND WHERE
6th century BCE, India

BEFORE
1700 BCE The Vedic religion was established in northern India, with a strict caste system and a strong element of religious asceticism.

AFTER
3rd century BCE Buddhism spread worldwide across the Indian subcontinent.

1st century BCE The first texts containing Siddhartha Gautama's teachings appear, soon followed by the spread of Buddhism into China.

In northern India, the 6th century BCE was a time of radical social and political change. There was terrible bloodshed, as the local rule of tribal groups gave way to the rise of new kingdoms, cities were expanding, drawing in people away from the simplicity of agricultural village life and trade was flourishing. But people were also starting to ask fundamental questions about life and the basis of religion.

On the one hand, there was the established Vedic religion, organized by the Brahmin class, based on sacrifice and the authority of the Vedic texts – to which few had access. It was brutal and condemned, requiring obedience to tradition and maintaining close distinctions. On the other hand, there were many freemen, wandering teachers – ascetics – who challenged formal religion. Some practiced extreme asceticism, adopting absolute simplicity and deprivation as a means of spiritual development, rejecting both physical comfort and social norms as slavery – a form of eternalism. But others followed the nihilist Lokapala materialist philosophy, rejecting conventional spiritual teachings entirely and arguing for a life based on pleasure, since there was nothing beyond the physical.

The young Hindu prince, Siddhartha Gautama (see right) set out to test both of these extreme positions – of Eternalism and Nihilism – and in doing so was to found a new spiritual philosophy. Having been brought up in relative luxury, Siddhartha felt that his lifestyle was incompatible with his growing awareness of the reality of old age, suffering, and death.

and offered no protection from them. He therefore embarked on a religious quest to find the origin of, and answer to, suffering. For seven years he practiced severe asceticism, depriving himself of all but the minimum necessities, but found that doing so did not yield the knowledge he sought.

He therefore abandoned the ascetic life, while remaining determined to discover the cause of suffering. He is said to have gained "enlightenment" – in other words, that he became aware of the true nature of reality – during an all-night session of meditation. After that, his followers were to refer to him as Buddha, an honorary title, meaning "one who is fully awake" or "the enlightened one".

New teachings

His enlightenment enabled Buddha to teach what is known as "The Middle Way". At the most obvious level this is a path between the two ways of life he rejected – the life of luxury and that of extreme asceticism.

BUDDHISM 99

Siddhartha Gautama

Born in 563 BCE into the ruling family of the Shakyas clan of northern India, Siddhartha Gautama was expected to take a prominent place in society. Brought up in comfort and well educated, he was married at 16 and had a son.

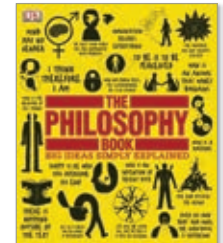

At 29, disillusioned with his life, he left home, spending years as a religious ascetic. Following an experience he described as "Enlightenment", he became a wandering teacher and soon attracted many followers, mainly in the cities of the Ganges Plain.

Siddhartha set up communities of monks and nuns, also gaining a growing number of lay followers. He engaged in discussions both with the rulers of the two main kingdoms in that area (Magadha and Kosala) and with other religious teachers. By the time he died, aged 60, Buddhism had become a substantial religious movement.

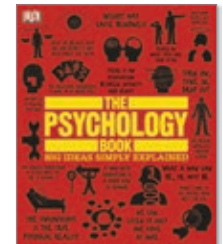

Key works

29 BCE The Dhammapadam, the most accessible summary of Siddhartha's early teachings, forms part of the Pali Canon.

Real-Size Farm Animals

Children will delight in seeing beautiful pictures of a calf, ducklings, sheepdog, barn owl, and other farm inhabitants as they learn more about how the animals behave, whether feeding, playing, or just snuggling close to their moms and dads. With fold-out flaps, each spread in this visually exciting guide presents a stunning photograph of a farm animal at its true size.

Cute calf

Very soon after she was born, this gentle calf stood up and began to feed on her mother's milk. When she's about two and a half years old, she will be ready to be milked for the first time. Her mother is a Jersey cow, so the milk will be rich and creamy.

Living together
Groups, or herds, of cows live together on farms. In the summer, they graze on grass, and in the winter they munch on hay. There are two main types of cattle—dairy cows provide milk, and beef cows are kept for their meat.

Is it time for milk?

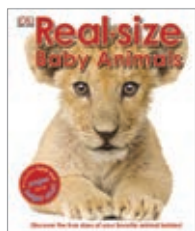

Milking
Farmers milk their cows twice a day—early in the morning and late in the afternoon. Many years ago, cows were always milked by hand. Today, machines are usually used.

Cow Tales

- Jersey cows provide up to 6 gallons (20 liters) of milk a day—that's about 80 glasses of milk!
- Cows have four parts (called chambers) in their stomach, which help them break down their food.
- Adult female cattle are called cows; adult males are called bulls.
